Welcome to Sharing the Spectrum

A unique Canadian bi-weekly newsletter written by Autistics for Autistics. We are very proud to showcase the work of our Autism Ambassadors and hope you enjoy their perspectives. Interested in becoming a contributor? Email us at info@autismcanada.org

That's Edu-tainment by Jason Oldford

"You've shown them your talent for public speaking and shared your story with them and taught them a lot—something they've wanted to hear, and that is Edu-tainment."

My Panic Room by Katherine Gallagher

"There is no switch in my brain that turns off panic. Some people's intuition kicks in, and they might dig deeper. Like maybe something's not right to them. While I do have these thoughts, they do not dominate while I am in panic mode. They are so buried by the panic they do not take front and centre stage."

Autistics in Love by Christopher Whelan

"Looking up after my thinking is done, he is also stimming – flapping his hands and rolling his neck. Both of us are out of words for the day, but we acknowledge each other's communication. I am thinking. He is happy."

Spiderwebs and Autism by Bruce Petherick

"If you interrupted a spider making a web, and then placed it somewhere else, it would continue finishing the web as if it was in its original position. It made me think about routines for me. What happens when a routine of mine gets interrupted?"

SOCIAL CHALLENGES & ASD

Our newest podcast episode is now live!

Rebecca Campol, writer of the Me Oh My Blog discusses life with her husband and two children who are all on the spectrum.

Rebecca also chats with her son about the social challenges he has had as a person on the spectrum.

Warm and intimate, this is an important conversation for everyone, whether you have ASD or know someone who does.
